Playing a game of hide and seek, the Hopper Floor Lamp reveals its oil-rubbed bronze finish when it's raised and keeps it under wraps when it's not. The articulation on the frame as it clasps the shade and the decorative finial makes this a stylish choice when an adjustable reading lamp is desired. Designed by Barry Goralnick, the lamp is meant to be luminous when only its brushed brass finish is showing at its shortest height. The angular shade, made of off-white shantung, is another design note that makes this luminary special.
